St. Joseph's Catholic Church is a fine old red brick church which was built on a native limestone foundation extending about four feet above the ground.

Most impressive to one approaching the church are the two identical steeples towering over all the neighboring buildings and trees. These towers begin as squares and then are quite nicely transformed into octagons. This transformation is executed very gracefully by first cutting off the square corners at the clock level; the next logical step is an octagon roof with equal sides.

Even the interest of the steeple roof is not left to chance, with its band to strengthen the form and small windows to arouse curiosity. As the eye moves down the towers to the ground, the quality of masonry work makes a strong impression. Al details are carried out in brick, and this adherence to a single building material creates a design that enables all features to be in perfect harmony with one another.

The cross-shaped plan is echoed in the gable roof with rose windows below each gable. All lintels incorporate brick used in a radial pattern, and the sills are also brick. Further depth and richness is developed in the structure through the use of pilasters and simple dentil work below the roof eaves.
